		RE:	Consider Utilizing Social Networking Media for District Communication

SUMMARY:

A growing number of parents, community members, and others are using social networking media available through the Internet. Many school districts are finding success in getting information to these audiences.

Many folks simply do not get their information through traditional sources, such as the district website, letters sent home, local newspaper, community television, etc. All of those are still very good, but social networking media will allow us to reach parents and others who use these sites on a daily basis.

As we discussed in February, Twitter would be one site available to post district communication. Another website, Facebook, would also be advantageous to utilize. Facebook draws a much larger group. School districts have seen several hundred people quickly subscribe to their sites with little or no advertising.

With both, information posted to the district website (news, announcements, etc.) can be reposted there. Essentially, it will be the same information – just made available to a broader audience. Some examples of a few area school districts are included.

Statistics indicate that the fastest growing population segment for Facebook is adults aged 30-50. Moreover, Facebook is also generating more hits daily over popular search engines Yahoo and Google.

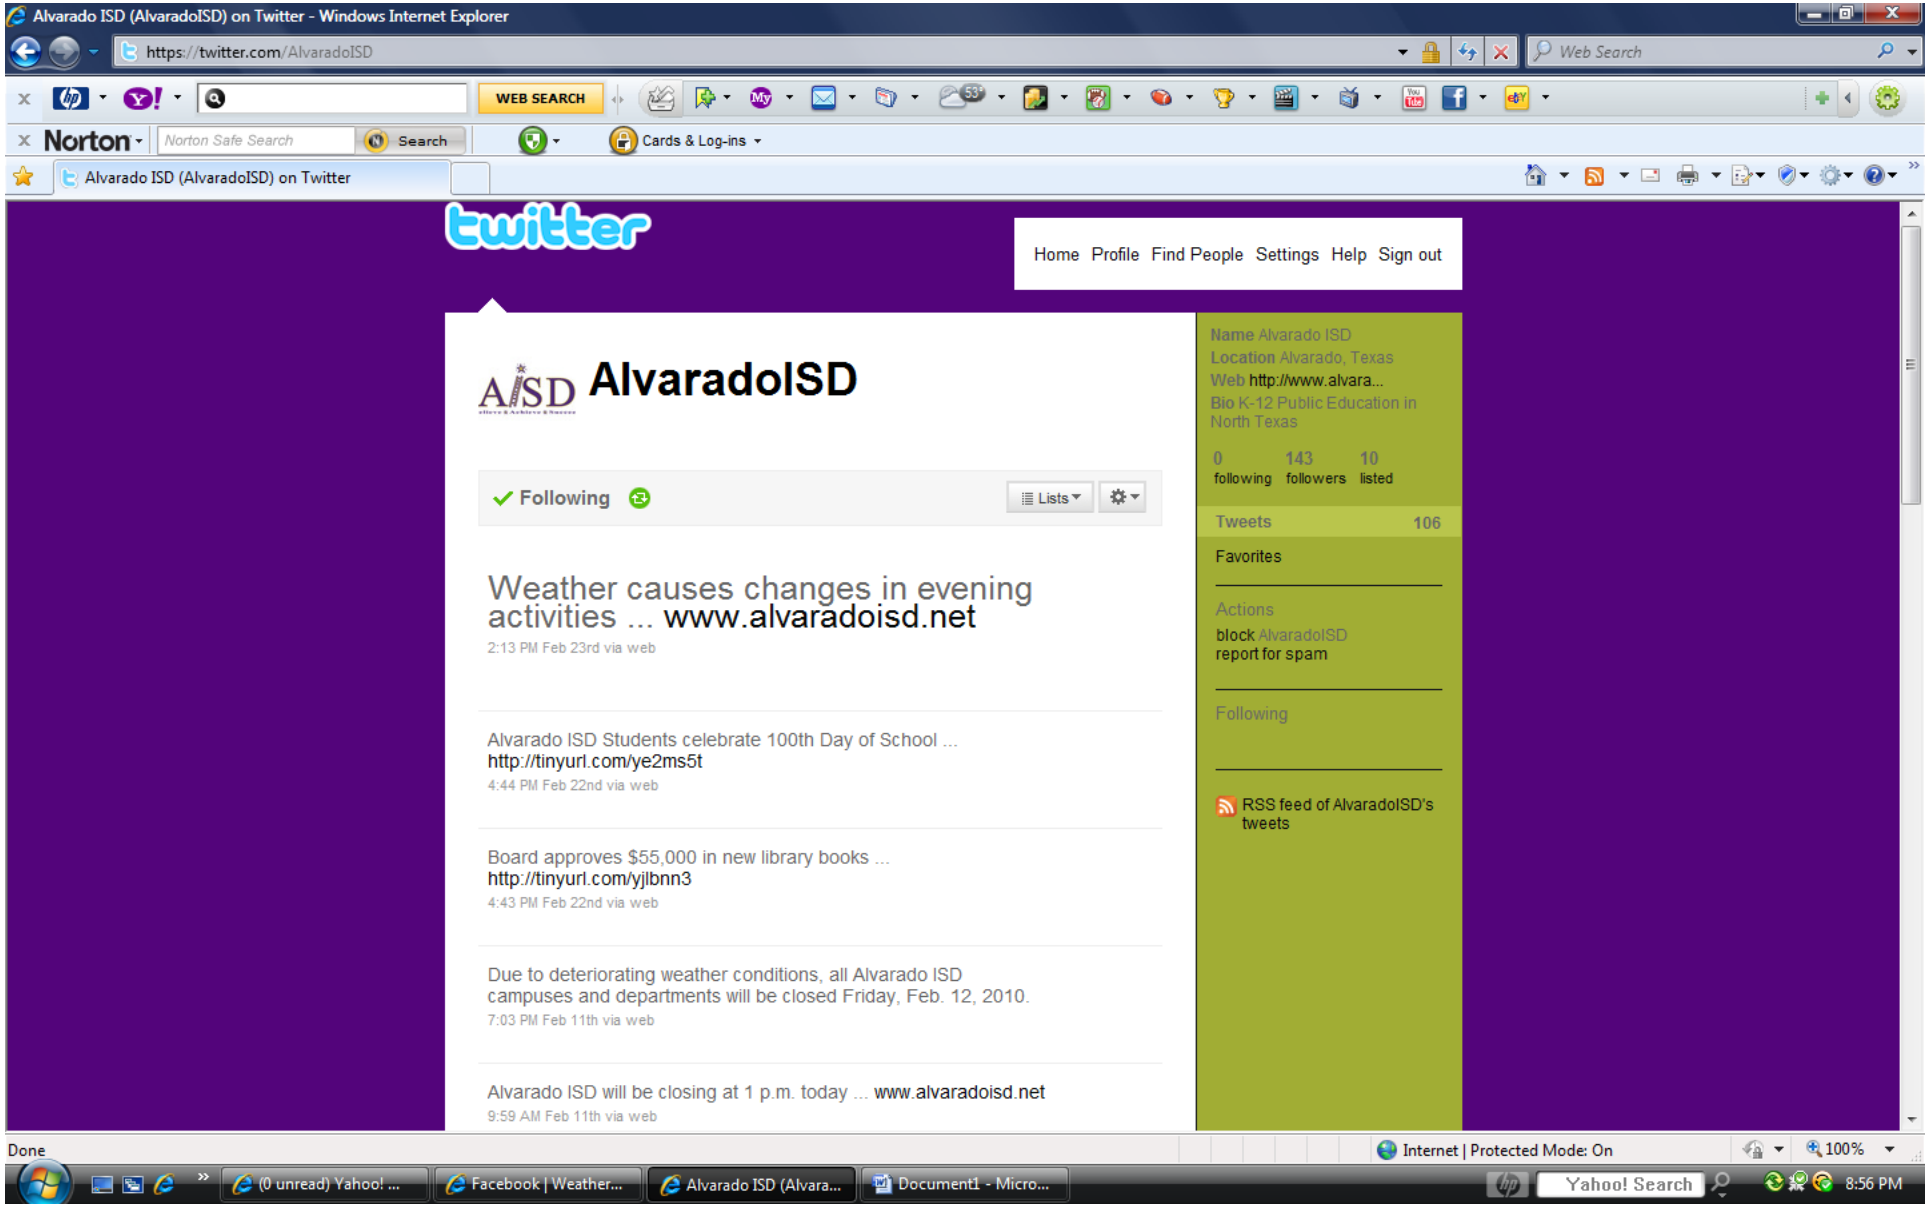

There will be little impact to current operations. Facebook will not be made available to the entire district network. Instead, it will only be available to the editor(s) for the sole purpose of posting information. In addition, there is no cost for either Facebook or Twitter.

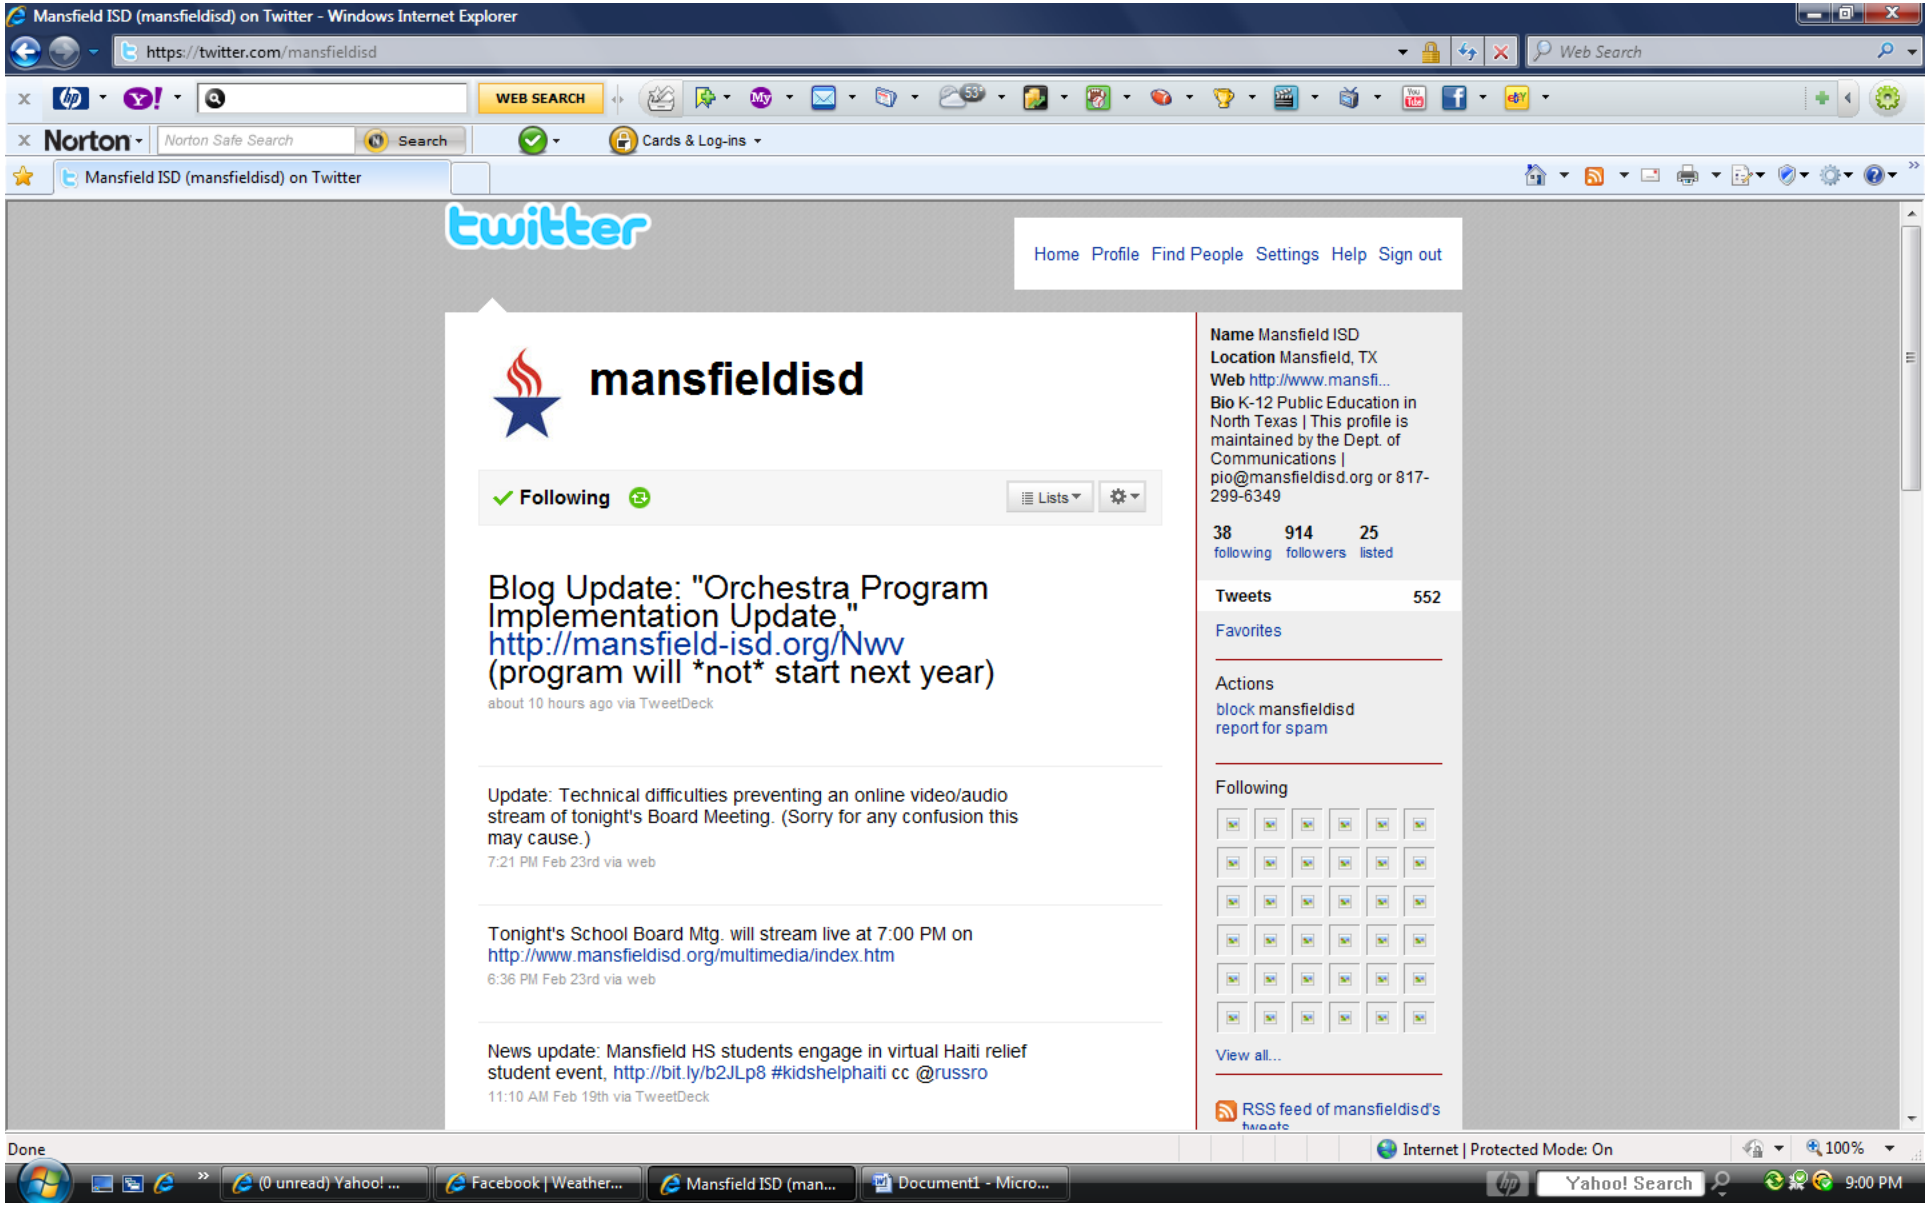

RECOMMENDATION: Approve both Facebook and Twitter for district communication purposes.

Respectfully submitted,

Ron Mayfield

The City of Granbury Broadband Coalition RUS Grant application outlines the following stated benefits: providing service in previously un-served areas, improving the access in underserved areas, improving access to and for all public safety agencies and citizens, providing broadband education to all users while adding awareness, training, access, equipment and support, stimulating demand for broadband services, economic growth, and job creation.

We, at Granbury Independent School District, recognize the advantages and benefits of the grant for families and students in Granbury. The service designed will cover over 46 square miles of Hood County and address the broadband needs of over 11,000 households within Hood County.
